4. Conclusion

ESP has become increasingly important as:

- There has been an increase in vocational training and learning throughout the world.
- With the spread of globalization has come the increasing use of English as the language of international communication.

More and more people are using English in a growing number of occupational contexts.

Students are starting to learn and therefore master general English at a younger age and so move on to ESP at an earlier age.

The described in this article the example of using communicative tasks from “Professionally-oriented English” aims to find the activities that will involve the class using a task based learning approach means that we can use even the textbook more interactively. The approbation is conducted in the course of teaching students of the Kostanai State University named after Akhmet Baitursynov, within the framework of the English teaching department, and some publications at the republican and international conferences.

To sum up the qualitative changes in the course design definitely affect the students’ standard of the English language knowledge and teach them international communication. It is good for them to try new uses for the ESP students have been learning in their professional settings. I have learned from many years of experience that in order to keep the students’ minds alert they need variety. The teacher should rack her/his brain thinking to create lessons in an interesting and varied manner.
